Concept 1 – Introduction & Definition

The Indian Companies Act, 1913 was the first structured law on company form of organisation. Some of the concepts of 1913 Act are still present in 2013 Act. This Act continued till 1956, when the first Companies Act of independent India was passed in 1956. After 57 years, the new companies were drafted and passed in 2013.

The Companies Act, 2013 ('The Act') consolidates and amends the law relating to the companies in India and replaces the Companies Act, 1956 , which is 56 years old, consisting of 29 Chapters, 470 Sections and 7 Schedules was notified partially on 12th September 2013 and partially again on 26th March, 2014. Part of the provisions related to National Company Law Tribunal have been notified with effect from 1st June, 2016.

The new Act intends to improve corporate governance and to further strengthen regulations for the corporate sector with the introduction of key provisions as to Duties and Liabilities of Directors/Independent Directors, Auditor Rotation, Establishment of Serious Fraud Investigation Office (SFIO), Constitution of National Financial Reporting Authority (NFRA), Class Action Suit, Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) etc.

The Act is administered by the Central Government through the Ministry of Corporate Affairs (MCA) and the Offices of Registrar of Companies, Official Liquidators, National Company Law Tribunal (NCLT), National Company Law Appellate Tribunal (NCLAT), etc. The ROC controls the task of incorporation of new companies and the administration of running companies.

Definition - As per Section 2(20), 'Company' means a company incorporated under the Act, or under the previous Company law.

Meaning - Company is an artificial, legal and juristic person, separate from its members having perpetual existence – Incorporated Company or Corporation.

Unincorporated company, not registered under this act, such as Partnership, Association of Persons, is a collection of individuals and they do not have a separate legal identity.

Concept 2 – Features of Company

a) Independent Corporate Existence

Also known as Separate Legal Entity Concept, it is distinct legal person existing independent of its members. By incorporation under the Act, the company gains a corporate personality.

Case Law: Mr. Salomon Vs. Salomon & Co. Ltd.

b) Limited Liability

The member's liability becomes limited or restricted to the nominal value of the shares taken by them or the amount guaranteed by them. No member is bound to contribute anything more than that.

A shareholder is liable to pay for the shares as and when it is called up. In case of default the shares may be forfeited, and the shareholder no more remains a shareholder.

c) Perpetual Succession

The death or Insolvency of individual members does not affect the corporate existence of the company. "Members may come and go but the company can go on forever."

Case Law: Gopalpur Tea Co. Ltd. v. Peshok Tea Co. Ltd. (1982)

d) Separate Property as separate owner

A company, being a legal person, is capable of owning, enjoying and disposing of property in its own name. The company becomes the owner of its capital and assets. The shareholders are not the several or joint owners of the company's assets.

Bacha F Guzdar v. C.I.T.

e) Transferability of Shares

In case of companies, shares should be capable of being easily transferred. Accordingly, the Companies Act, 2013 in Section 44 declares: 'The shares or debentures or other interest of any member in a company shall be movable property, transferable in the manner provided by the articles of the company'. This provides liquidity to the investor and stability to the company.

f) Common Seal

Prior to the Companies (Amendment) Act, 2015 the common seal is a seal used by a corporation as the symbol of its incorporation and also a statutory requirement for a company, but now it is optional. In case the company has opted to have a common seal, the same shall be used as provided under the Act or the Articles. In case a company does not have a common seal, the authorisation shall be made by two directors or by a director and the Company Secretary, wherever the company has appointed a Company Secretary.

Lifting of the 'Corporate Veil'

The phrase "lifting the veil" is looking behind the company as a legal person, i.e., disregarding the corporate entity and paying regard to the realities behind the legal facade. Where the law ignores the company and concern themselves directly with the members or managers, the corporate veil may be said to have been lifted.

In instances where the activities of a company are violating the public interest or public policy.

The following are the cases where company law disregards the principle that the company is a legal entity distinct and separate from its shareholders or members:

1) In cases related to trading with the enemy, where the courts apply the test of control.

2) For matters concerning taxes, duties, and stamps, especially when controlling interest is in question.
3) When companies form subsidiaries to act as their agents, courts may disregard the corporate veil depending on the case's facts.
   Case Law: Smith, Stone and Knight Ltd. vs. Lord Mayor, etc., of Birmingham [1939] 4, All. 116
4) Courts can lift the corporate veil when companies attempt to avoid welfare legislation.
   Case Law: Workmen of Associated Rubber Industry Ltd. v. Associated Rubber Industry Ltd.
5) The Court tend the lift the corporate veil in order to find the realities of situation in case of commission of fraud or improper conduct.
6) The corporate veil is lifted where the company has abused the corporate personality for an unjust and unequitable purpose.
7) The Courts lift the corporate veil or disregard the corporate personality of a company to protect the public policy and prevent transactions contrary to public policy.
   Case Law: Connors v. Connors Ltd; (1939) S.C.R. 162
8) Under the law relating to exchange control. The courts lift the corporate veil in quasi-criminal cases in order to look behind the legal person and punish the real persons who have violated the law.
9) When companies are used to avoid legal obligations, courts may treat them as if they do not exist.
10) In a recent Supreme Court judgment, the corporate veil was lifted when a company transferred shares to disguise a prohibited land sale.
    Case Law: Estate Officer UT Chandigarh v. Esys Information Technologies Limited (2016)

Concept 7 - Doctrines

7.1 Doctrine of Ultra Vires

The doctrine of ultra vires limits the powers of a company to act beyond the scope defined by its Memorandum of Association (MOA). This is because these documents are construed as 'public document' under Section 399 of the Companies Act, 2013. Directors are restricted from undertaking actions outside these defined powers, even if legally valid. Shareholders, while drafting the MOA, set boundaries that neither they nor the Board of Directors can exceed unless the MOA is amended.

- Actions by the Board of Directors beyond the MOA's scope are ultra vires and invalid.
- The company or shareholders cannot ratify such ultra vires acts, even if all members agree.
- However, actions within the company's powers can be ratified by the members.

This doctrine ensures that the company operates within its defined objectives and legal boundaries.

7.2 Doctrine of constructive notice

The doctrine of constructive notice means that once a company's memorandum and articles of association are registered, the public is considered to know their contents. Anyone dealing with the company must follow these documents, and engaging in ultra vires transactions is at their own risk. However, this doctrine does not prevent company management from wrongful acts. The doctrine of indoor management, established in Royal British Bank v. Turquand (1856), protects outsiders by allowing them to assume that internal company procedures are properly followed. This ensures a balance between public awareness of company documents and protecting those who deal with the company from having to investigate internal affairs.

7.3 Doctrine of Indoor Management

The doctrine of constructive notice does not imply that outsiders are aware of a company's internal affairs. For example, if the company's articles or memorandum authorize an act, an outsider can assume that all necessary formalities have been observed. In Royal British Bank v. Turquand (1856), the directors of Royal British Bank issued bonds without a required resolution, yet it was held that the outsider, Turquand, could sue on the bonds because he was entitled to assume the resolution had been passed. This case illustrates the doctrine of indoor management, which serves as a limitation to the doctrine of constructive notice. However, exceptions to the doctrine of indoor management exist; an outsider cannot rely on it if they had reasonable access to information that should have been known before dealing with the company, as this would undermine the assumption of validity in the company's actions.

Concept 8 - Conversion of a Public Company into Private Company or vice-versa

8.1 Conversion of public company into private company

A public company can be converted into a private company by passing a special resolution, after altering its AOA so as to include therein the restrictions contained in Section 2(68).

Under Section 14 (1), any alteration made in the articles to convert a public company into a private company shall take effect only with the approval of the Central Government which shall make such order as it may deem fit.

8.2 Conversion of private company into public company

Similarly where a private company alters its articles by passing special resolution in such a manner that they no longer includes the restrictions and limitations which are required to be included in the articles of a private company, then such company shall cease to be a private company from the date of such alteration.

8.3 Filing with the Registrar

Every alteration of the articles and a copy of the order of the Central Government approving the alteration of articles in respect of conversion of public company into private company or private company into public company shall be filed with the Registrar, together with a printed copy of the altered articles, within a period of 15 days.

Any alteration of the articles registered as above shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be valid as if it were originally in the articles.

b) Apply profits or other income to promote its objectives.
c) Prohibit payment of dividends to its members.

The Central Government may, by licence, allow such associations to register as limited companies without the addition of "Limited" or "Private Limited" to their names. Upon registration under Section 8, the company will:

a) Enjoy the privileges and obligations of limited companies.
b) Allow a firm to be a member.
c) Not alter its memorandum or articles without prior approval from the Central Government.
d) Only convert to another type of company after meeting prescribed conditions.

The Central Government may, by order, revoke the licence granted to a company registered under this section if

a) the company contravenes any of the requirements of this section or
b) any of the conditions subject to which a licence is issued or
c) the affairs of the company are conducted fraudulently or
d) in a manner violative of the objects of the company or prejudicial to public interest, direct the company to convert its status and change its name to add the word "Limited" or the words "Private Limited", as the case may be, to its name. Where a licence is revoked, the Central Government may, by order, if it is satisfied that it is essential in the public interest, direct that the company be wound up under this Act or amalgamated with another company registered under this section with similar objectives.

Provided that no such orders shall be made unless the company is given a reasonable opportunity of being heard.

If on the winding up of a company registered under this section, there remains, after the satisfaction of its debts and liabilities, any asset, that may be transferred to another company registered under this section and having similar objects, subject to such conditions as the Tribunal may impose, or may be sold and proceeds thereof credited to Insolvency and Bankruptcy Fund formed under section 224 of the Insolvency and Bankruptcy Code, 2016

A company registered under this section must amalgamate only with another not-for-profit company with similar objectives. A certificate of incorporation must include the permanent account number.

Failure to comply with the requirements may result in fines: the company faces a fine between ₹ 10 lakh and ₹1 crore, while directors and officers may be fined between ₹25,000 and ₹25 lakh. If fraud is proven, those officers may be liable under Section 447.

Concept 1 – Introduction

Case Law - Foss Vs Harbottle

In the case of Foss v. Harbottle, two shareholders of the Victory Park Company, Foss and Turton, sued the company's directors and promoters for misappropriation of assets and other improper acts. The court ruled against the shareholders and established two key principles:

a) The Proper Plaintiff Principle

If any wrongdoing, such as misappropriation of assets or director misconduct, occurs within a company, the company itself is the only proper party to file a suit. This means that the company, not individual shareholders, should take legal action.

b) The Majority Rule Principle

Major decisions in a company are made at general meetings, following a democratic process. If the majority of shareholders approve a decision, the minority shareholders cannot challenge it.

However, there are four exceptions where shareholders can bring an individual suit, even without following these principles:

c) Minority oppression.

Concept 1 – Introduction

Corporate governance refers to the process of managing a company's affairs with fairness, honesty, and good practices, ensuring the interests of all stakeholders are balanced. Stakeholder theory: This theory considers wide inclusion of stakeholders, other than shareholders. Hence the directors need to keep a balance between the interests of various stakeholders.

Trusteeship theory: The directors are the persons who are given the authority to run the business by the shareholders which may be a huge amount of money. The relationship of trust is very important for performance by directors who take major decisions of the company.

Concept 9 – Recommendations of Committees on Corporate Governance

Several committees have contributed to the development of corporate governance in India, taking inspiration from international frameworks such as the Cadbury Committee in the USA. Below are the key recommendations from four significant committees:

The Cadbury Committee (USA)

The Adrian Cadbury Committee was set up by the Security and Exchange Commission (SEC) of USA to recommend desirable corporate disclosures.
Recommendations

(iv) Audit Committee shall also review the half yearly and annual financial statements before submission to the Board.

(v) The committee should have authority to investigate any matter within its terms of reference and shall have full access to information and it should be free to obtain external professional advice.

(vi) Chairman of the Audit Committee should be available to answer question about its working at the Annual General Meeting of the company

Rahul Bajaj Committee (India)

Confederation of Indian Industry constituted a committee to recommend desirable corporate governance practices chaired by none other than Mr. Rahul Bajaj. It is not clear whether the inspiration was the Cadbury Committee. Whatever it may be, this committee made a breakthrough in India on the subject in the most formal way.

K.R. Chandratre Committee (India)

Though the Committee was not on Corporate Governance, it made provision for audit committees for proper corporate governance. Dr. K. R. Chandratre, one of the reputed expert on Company Law in the country was appointed chairman of the committee to draft a new Companies Act in the form of Companies Bill which would replace the existing Companies Act, 1956. The said Companies Bill, (1977) have been given to the Government. It has suggested many important changes , some of which have been accepted and incorporated in recent amendment in the Companies Act, 1956.

Board Level: At the board level, good governance is standardized through regulations and disclosures mandated by the Companies Act, 2013 and LODR regulations. These details are further discussed in this study material.

Below Board Level: Companies implement their own mechanisms for ethics, codes of conduct, and discipline below the board level. Governance practices typically follow a "top-down approach," permeating through various mechanisms such as:

- Whistle-blower policies

b) Therefore, Corporate Governance Rating is an important component in the overall governance system.
c) Corporate Governance Rating is defined as an opinion on a company's corporate governance system, its compliance with the various parameters deployed for assessment and the rating differentiates companies in accordance with their corporate governance quality.
d) CG Rating acts as an opinion on relative standing of an entity with regard to adoption of corporate governance practices. It may be justified using ratings on five parameters.
   1) Firstly it provides information to various stakeholders about the level of corporate governance practices of the organization.
   2) Secondly it enables corporates to obtain an independent and credible assessment of the quality and extent of their adherence to governance standards.
   3) Thirdly the rating process determines the relative standing of the organisation vis-à-vis the best practices followed in the domestic as well as international arena.
   4) Fourthly, organisations can deploy the CG ratings as reference and set benchmark for further improvements.

Environmental, Social and Governance (ESG)

ESG Ratings Component Structure

Concept 11 - Definition and Importance of Family Businesses

The International Finance Corporation (IFC) defines a family business as a company where the voting majority is held by the controlling family, including founders who plan to pass the business to their descendants. Terms such as "family business," "family firm," and "family-controlled company" are used interchangeably throughout the IFC's Family Business Governance Handbook.

Family businesses are recognized as the world's oldest and most prevalent form of business organization, constituting over 70% of businesses in many countries and playing a crucial role in economic growth and employment. For instance:

- In Spain, approximately 75% of businesses are family-owned, contributing 65% to the country's GNP.
- In Latin America, family businesses account for about 60% of the aggregate GNP.

Examples of Notable Family Businesses:

a) Italy: Salvatore Ferragamo, Benetton, Fiat Group
b) France: L'Oréal, Carrefour Group, LVMH, Michelin
c) South Korea: Samsung, Hyundai Motor, LG Group
d) Germany: BMW, Siemens
e) Japan: Kikkoman, Ito-Yokado
f) USA: Ford Motors Co., Wal-Mart Stores

Standard corporate governance norms may not be suitable for family businesses due to the unique familial dynamics at play. A balance must be struck between the emotional ties of the family and the business's profitability, acknowledging both the strengths and weaknesses inherent in the family business model.

Concept 12 - Features of Corporate Governance in Family-Owned Companies in India

In India, family-owned businesses have a longstanding tradition, with 99% of corporate houses still under family ownership. While this is generally seen as positive, it also presents unique governance challenges:

a) Leadership Composition: Full-time directors and senior management personnel are often family members or closely related to the family.
b) Coterie Formation: The formation of close-knit groups or coteries within the management is common, impacting decision-making.
c) Dilution of Control: Control and ownership can dilute over generations due to the distribution of shares among family members.
d) Conflict of Interest: Conflicts between personal interests of promoters and company interests frequently arise. However, procedures are typically followed to mitigate legal complications.
e) Emotional Decision-Making: Emotional attachments can lead to decisions that may not align with sound managerial practices.
f) Family Dynamics: When family members are united, non-family directors or managers may have limited influence in decision-making. Conflicts within the family can lead to confusion in leadership, delayed decisions, and distrust among stakeholders, negatively affecting stability, reputation, and performance.
g) Clear Roles and Succession Planning: Some families establish defined roles for members and structured succession planning to minimize conflicts.
h) Personal Image: The personal image of the chairman, managing director, or directors significantly influences the company's reputation.
i) Professional Aversion: Many seasoned professionals are hesitant to work in family businesses due to perceived challenges.
j) Leadership Crisis: The death or disability of a senior family member can trigger a leadership crisis within the business.

Concept 13 - Emerging issues in CG in family managed companies in India.

a) Separation of ownership and management: In few companies in India, the main promoter or owner have chosen to be investor and not to a part of management even as part time chairman. The whole Board of directors are non-owners and are hard core professionals.
b) Family members acquiring professional courses from reputed institutes.
c) Promoters are encouraging professionals in the organisation.
d) Promoters are more focused on compliances to avoid loss of reputation which may result to price fall in the share market.
e) Role and leadership clarity decided at board level
f) Owners are accepting and honouring opinion of managers.
g) Family's social and emotional issues are being satisfied by forming trusts/foundations which are separate from the business entity, without any conflict of interest.

Concept 14 - Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) – Introduction, Concept and Background

Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) refers to the commitment of business enterprises to engage in practices that benefit society, particularly the less privileged. It emphasizes the principle of Concern, Care, and Share (CCS), suggesting that genuine concern leads to caring actions, which in turn result in sharing resources for societal welfare.

Business-Society Interface

Philip Kotler emphasized that businesses operate within society; hence, societal demand drives production and services. This creates a cycle:

Production → Employment → Earnings → Demand → Production.

Consequently, businesses play a vital role in social development, and the ideal scenario involves corporations collaborating with society to enhance overall welfare. CSR encompasses meeting the economic, ethical, and legal demands of society while maintaining business sustainability. Corporations are responsible for minimizing adverse impacts on stakeholders, which include employees, consumers, investors, civil society, and the broader community.

International Scenario

The UN Human Rights Council established the UN Working Group (UNWG) to facilitate the implementation of the UN Guiding Principles (UNGPs), urging states to develop National Action Plans (NAPs) to promote these principles.

UN Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs): Adopted in September 2015, the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development outlines 17 goals recognizing business as a crucial driver for economic growth while urging adherence to the UNGPs.

Paris Agreement on Climate Change (2015): This agreement under the UN Framework for Climate Change focuses on combating climate change. India ratified it in October 2016, committing to its National Determined Contributions (NDCs).

CSR in India - Background

The Ministry of Corporate Affairs (MCA), Government of India, released a set of guidelines in 2011 called the National Voluntary Guidelines (NVGs) on the Social, Environmental and Economic Responsibilities of Business.

In order to align the NVGs with the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and the United Nations Guiding Principles (UNGP), the process of revision of NVGs was started in 2015. After revision and updating, the new principles are called the National Guidelines on Responsible Business Conduct (NGRBC).

The primary rationale for the update is to capture key national and international developments in the sustainable development agenda and business responsibility field that have occurred since the release of the NVGs in 2011.

Some of the key drivers of the NGRBC are given below:

1) The UN Guiding Principles for Business and Human Rights (UNGPs): The United Nations Human Rights Council endorsed the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights. Implementing the United Nations 'Protect, Respect and Remedy' Framework. The UNGPs are grounded in recognition of:
   a) the State's existing obligations to respect, protect and fulfil human rights and fundamental freedoms;
   b) the requirement of business enterprises to respect human rights; and
   c) the need for access to effective remedy for those who are affected by adverse business related human rights impacts or abuse.

   Since their release, the UNGPs have become the authoritative global standard for Business and Human Rights.

   In 2012, the Securities and Exchange Board of India amended the Listing Agreement for companies listed in the stock exchanges in India, and mandated the submission of an ABRRs (Annual Business Responsibility Report) by the top 100 listed companies. The ABRR is based on the Business Reporting Framework of the NVGs, and SEBI has since extended this requirement to the top 500 listed companies.
2) Requires companies to undertake Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) initiatives in communities, and has since provided additional rules and guidance on the areas and target groups of such interventions in consistency with national socio-economic priorities.

Concept 15 - National Guidelines on Responsible Business Conduct (NGRBC)

The National Guidelines on Responsible Business Conduct (NGRBC) provide a comprehensive framework for all businesses operating in India, regardless of their ownership, size, sector, structure, or location. This framework aims to guide companies, including foreign multinational corporations (MNCs), in aligning their operations with local and national standards for responsible business conduct. Keeping the importance of Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises (MSMEs) in view, the business case for adoption of NGRBC by the MSMEs is also given.

An updated Business Responsibility Reporting Framework (BRRF) has been included for reporting of actions taken by businesses vis-à-vis the Principles and Core Elements. The BRRF is meant to serve as an internal tool for companies to assess where they are in their journey of responsible business conduct and identify opportunities for improvement.

Overview of the NGRBC

The NGRBC consists of nine thematic pillars of business responsibility, known as Principles. The guidelines are designed to help organizations implement these Principles effectively, with Annexure 1 providing detailed guidance on their adoption and implementation.

Principle 1: Businesses should conduct and govern themselves with integrity and in a manner that is ethical, transparent and accountable.

Businesses should operate with integrity and ethics, ensuring transparency and accountability in all functions and processes. This Principle emphasizes the accountability of businesses as integral parts of society, guiding their economic, social, and environmental responsibilities.

Principle 2: Businesses should provide goods and service in a manner that is sustainable and safe.

Companies must focus on designing and manufacturing products that are sustainable and safe, minimizing adverse environmental and social impacts throughout their lifecycle—from design to disposal. This Principle promotes resource efficiency and safety in production processes.

Principle 3: Businesses should respect and promote the well-being of all employees, including those in their value chains.

Businesses should respect and promote the well-being of all employees, including those within their value chains. This Principle advocates for equitable policies and practices that ensure dignity and decent work for all employees, recognizing their well-being and that of their families.

Principle 4: Businesses should respect the interests of and be responsive to all its stakeholders.

Companies have a responsibility to respect the interests of their stakeholders and respond to their needs. This Principle highlights the importance of maximizing positive impacts while minimizing negative effects on stakeholders, including shareholders, employees, and the broader community.

Principle 5: Businesses should respect and promote human rights.

Implementation of CSR projects

Direct implementation by the company

There are some large companies and their budget for CSR is also very high. These companies have adequate manpower and execute the CSR project. They have separate well organized CSR department in the company.

Advantages of direct implementation by the company

Concept 19 – Introduction to Sustainability Development

Sustainable Development (SD) focuses on meeting the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs. The concept was popularized in the "Brundtland Report" of 1987, also known as "Our Common Future." It emphasizes balancing three critical aspects: economic growth, environmental stewardship, and social equity, collectively referred to as the "triple bottom-line approach."

Concept 20 - Triple Bottom-Line Approach to Sustainable Development

a) Economic Approach ("Profit"): This approach ensures that current economic decisions do not negatively affect the potential for future economic growth or living standards. In the business context, it means achieving profitability without degrading the capacity for future prosperity.
b) Ecological/Environmental Approach ("Planet"): This approach stresses the preservation and responsible use of natural resources to ensure long-term environmental health. Companies are encouraged to minimize waste, pollution, and overuse of resources like water, minerals, and forests, while protecting biodiversity.
c) Social Approach ("People"): Industries are expected to operate in ways that safeguard social welfare and security. This includes protecting workers' rights, promoting fair wages, and contributing to the overall well-being of society, ensuring no harm to social values and community welfare

Action Areas for Sustainability Management

a) Change present process to alternate process which would reduce use of natural resources
b) Convince the community to reduce waste, protect the environment, adopt recycling, use bio degradable packaging
c) Control deforestation and encourage of forestation
d) Reduce discharge of affluent in the environment; install affluent treatment plants.
e) Carbon emission management, etc.

Concept 21 – Benefits of Sustainability Management

b) It applies across various domains like business, agriculture, society, and personal life to maintain quality of life and minimize resource depletion.

c) Businesses require sustainable management to remain competitive, as unsustainable practices threaten their long-term survival.
d) Communities also need sustainable management for long-term prosperity, ensuring resources are used wisely for future generations.
e) Natural resources like forests need sustainable management to ensure their continuous availability for current and future use.
f) Individuals can practice sustainable management by making choices that protect the environment and enhance personal well-being.
g) Sustainable managers must plan for systems that can maintain themselves over time while meeting the needs of future generations.

Concept 22 - Sustainability Reporting

It is gaining importance, driven by the United Nations' Principles of Responsible Investment (PRI), which have been adopted by 3,500 investors committed to integrating Environmental, Social, and Governance (ESG) factors into their decisions. Many large companies globally are already reporting their ESG profiles using recognized standards. Though ESG ratings are not mandatory, they communicate a company's commitment to sustainability to stakeholders.

In November 2015, SEBI prescribed a format for reporting ESG parameters for listed entities. In May 2021, SEBI introduced the Business Responsibility and Sustainability Report (BRSR), requiring listed entities to disclose performance based on the NGBRC.

Purpose of Disclosure:

a) To provide quantitative and standardized information, allowing easy comparison between companies for third parties, especially investors.
b) To promote proper stakeholder engagement, benefiting both companies and stakeholders.
c) To encourage companies to focus beyond financial performance, fostering a balanced ecosystem involving corporate, society, and environment.

Application of Mandatory Reporting

From FY 2022-23, the BRSR filing is mandatory for the top 1,000 listed companies by market capitalization.

- Appoint a manager to manage the secured assets.

The Appellate Tribunal can reduce this amount, but not below 25%, for valid reasons

Concept 1 - Introduction and Evolution of The Insurance Act, 1938

a) Pre - 1912: No specific insurance law existed in India. Insurance companies were governed by the Indian Companies Act, 1882.
b) Early 20th Century: Many insurance companies were formed, but many were financially unstable, prompting the need for legislation.
c) 1912: The Indian Life Insurance Companies Act and Provident Insurance Societies Act were enacted, focusing on life insurance, based on the English Insurance Companies Act of 1909. It dealt only with life insurance, while the English Act covered both life and non-life insurance. The Act had defects like unregulated practices, no investment restrictions, no investigations of unsound companies, and exemptions for foreign companies.
d) 1938: The Government introduced a bill in 1937, resulting in the Insurance Act, 1938 effective from July 1, 1939.
e) 1950: A comprehensive amendment was made to the Insurance Act, 1938 in 1950
f) 1956: Life insurance business was nationalized in 1956. After which Life Insurance Corporation of India Act, 1956 was passed, LIC came into force from September 1, 1956.
g) 1963: Marine Insurance Act, 1963 was enacted to regulate marine insurance in India.

Before which only two state insurers existed: Life Insurance Corporation of India (LIC) and General Insurance Corporation of India (GIC).
b) Industry has seen a gradual growth over the last 15 years in terms of product innovation, vibrant distribution channels, penetration and density.
c) India is poised to emerge as one of the fastest growing insurance markets in the world. While presently the Indian insurance market is the 10th (tenth) largest in the world, it is poised to become the 6th (sixth) largest by 2032.
d) FDI Regulations:

- 26% FDI allowed through the automatic approval route.
- FDI up to 49%, approval from the Central Government is required.
- 100% FDI is permitted for insurance intermediaries.

Concept 3 - Basic Principles of insurance

Principle of Good Faith

A contract of insurance is a contract 'uberrimea fidei' i.e., a contract of "utmost good faith". This is a fundamental principle of insurance law. There is no difference between a contract of insurance and any other contract except that in a contract of insurance there is a requirement of utmost good faith.

Warranties and Conditions

Warranties in an insurance policy, whether express or implied, are binding commitments. A breach of warranty will void the policy, even if the breach does not relate to a material aspect of the insured risk. Implied warranties are primarily found in marine insurance.

Conditions outline the obligations and limitations of an insurance policy. They can be classified as either conditions precedent or conditions subsequent. Conditions precedent are essential for establishing a valid contract; failure to meet them renders the contract void from the start. Conditions subsequent pertain to the ongoing validity of the contract; if these conditions are not fulfilled, the contract is voided from the date of breach.

Implied conditions are those mandated by law that apply to all insurance contracts, such as insurable interest and good faith. Any condition that seeks to shorten the legally prescribed limitation period is void. An insurance policy may specify forfeiture or waiver of rights, which remains enforceable against either party.

Misrepresentation

Representations are statements made by one party to another before or during the formation of an insurance contract, relating to matters or circumstances concerning the contract, but not an integral part of it. These statements are considered fulfilled once the policy is accepted. A mere statement of representations does not make them warranties, but if they become part of the contract, they are considered warranties. If the representations are false, the policy can be avoided, even if the loss isn't directly related to the misrepresentation. Life insurance policies cannot be questioned on the grounds of misrepresentation after 2 years from the policy's commencement.

The Insurance Act outlines three conditions for wilful misrepresentation:

a) the statement must be material or omit material facts;
b) the omission must be fraudulent; and
c) the policyholder must know the statement is false or omits important facts.

Indemnity and Subrogation

Most insurance policies, except for life and personal accident insurance, are contracts of indemnity. In such contracts, the insurer agrees to compensate the insured for actual losses incurred due to the insured event. The occurrence of the event is beyond the control of both the insurance company and the insured. Even within policy limits, the insured cannot recover more than their actual loss.

In marine insurance, the insurer agrees to indemnify the insured based on the terms specified in the contract. While the objective is to restore the insured to their pre-loss position, the amount of indemnity is subject to certain conditions:

a) The insured must provide proof of the injury or loss.
b) The indemnity is limited to the amount stated in the policy.
c) Indemnification is provided only for proximate causes.
d) The market value of the property determines the indemnity amount.

Subrogation means the right of the insurer (insurance company), after paying a claim to the insured, to step into the shoes of the insured and recover the loss from the third party responsible for it.

Proximate Cause

The doctrine of proximate cause is summarized by the maxim "Causa Proxima non remota spectator," meaning that the immediate cause, rather than a distant cause, is deemed responsible for the loss. Under this doctrine, the insurer is obligated to compensate the insured for losses that directly or indirectly arise from the insured event specified in the policy. The insured bears the burden of proving that the loss was due to the proximate cause.

Insurance and Consumer Protection

The Consumer Protection Act, 1986, is a significant piece of legislation aimed at safeguarding consumers in India. It provides compensatory measures for any deficiencies in services, including those offered by insurance companies. Consumers can file complaints against insurers for issues related to the repudiation of claims, claim admissions, or claim amount calculations.

However, insurance companies are generally not considered "consumers" under the Act, as they do not receive direct services from insurers. The proper recourse for insurers is to file suits in civil courts for loss recovery. In contrast, individuals or companies purchasing insurance to manage risks are recognized as consumers under the Act, even if the insurance is for commercial purposes

Insurable Interest

Insurable interest refers to a legal or financial stake in the subject matter of the insurance, meaning the insured would suffer a loss or incur a liability if the insured event occurs. For an insurance contract to be valid, the insured must have a genuine interest in the life or property being insured. Without this, the contract is considered a wager and is void.

The insured must demonstrate potential financial loss in case of damage to the insured property or life. Insurable interest varies by the type of insurance:

- Life and personal accident insurance: The interest must exist when the policy is taken.
- Fire and motor insurance: The interest must exist both when the policy is taken and at the time of the accident.
- Marine insurance: Insurable interest is not required at the time the policy is taken, but it must exist when the event occurs.

The coverage typically starts from the time specified in the policy unless otherwise agreed.

Concept 4 - Important Definitions under the Insurance Act, 1938

a) Authority: Refers to the Insurance Regulatory and Development Authority of India, established under the Insurance Regulatory and Development Authority Act, 1999.
b) Policy Holder: A policy holder includes a person who has received the entire interest in the policy but excludes an assignee whose interest is conditional.

c) Controller of Insurance: An officer appointed by the Central Government to exercise the powers and functions of the Authority under relevant insurance laws.
d) Indian Insurance Company: An insurer limited by shares, registered as a public company under the Companies Act, 2013, with no more than 49% of equity shares held by foreign investors. It must primarily engage in life, general, or health insurance business.
e) Insurer: Includes Indian insurance companies, statutory bodies, insurance co-operatives, and foreign companies engaged in re-insurance through a branch in India.
f) Insurance Agent: An individual who earns commissions for soliciting or procuring insurance business, including policy renewals.
g) Life Insurance Business: Life Insurance Business involves creating insurance contracts that provide financial benefits related to human life. This includes contracts that guarantee payment upon death (excluding accidental death) or upon specific life events. Key components include:

- the granting of disability and double or triple indemnity accident benefits, if so provided in the contract of insurance,
- the granting of annuities upon human life ; and
- the granting of superannuation allowances

h) Re-insurance: "Re-insurance" means the insurance of part of one insurer's risk by another insurer who accepts the risk for a mutually acceptable premium.
i) Fire Insurance Business: Contracts that provide coverage against loss due to fire or other related risks, excluding incidental coverage from other classes.
j) Marine Insurance Business: Involves contracts insuring vessels, cargoes, and related interests during transit, including associated warehouse risks.

Concept 5 - Salient features of the Insurance Act

a) Indian properties, including ships, vessels, or aircraft registered in India, cannot be insured with foreign insurers without the permission of the Insurance Regulatory and Development Authority of India (IRDAI).
b) Requirements as to Capital: No insurer carrying on the business of life insurance, general insurance, health insurance or re-insurance in India or after the commencement of the Insurance Regulatory and Development Authority Act, 1999, shall be registered unless he has minimum paid up capital as prescribed below:

- Life or General Insurance: ₹ 100 Crores
- Health Insurance: ₹ 100 Crores
- Reinsurance: ₹ 200 Crores

Insurers may increase their paid-up equity capital as per the provisions of the Companies Act, 2013, the Securities and Exchange Board of India Act, 1992, and applicable regulations. Registration as an insurer requires net owned funds of at least ₹ 5,000 Crores.

To operate in life, general, health, or re-insurance, companies must meet the following requirements:

a) The capital must consist of equity shares with a single face value and other forms as specified by regulations.
b) Voting rights are restricted to equity shares.

c) The paid-up amount must be the same for all shares, except during a one-year grace period for share calls.

These conditions do not apply to public companies that issued non-ordinary shares with varying paid-up amounts before the Insurance (Amendment) Act, 1950, for 3 years after its commencement.

Concept 6 – Important Sections of the Insurance Act, 1938

Concept 13 – Meaning of Business Intelligence (BI)

Business Intelligence (BI) is a technology-driven process that helps organizations analyse data and provide actionable insights for decision-making. It involves collecting data from internal and external sources, preparing it for analysis, and creating visualizations, dashboards, and reports.

The ultimate goal of BI is to drive better business decisions that enable organizations to increase revenue, improve operational efficiency and gain competitive advantage. To achieve that goal, BI uses a combination of analytics, data management and reporting tools, plus various methodologies.

Concept 14 – Process of Business Intelligence

a) Data Collection and Storage: BI data is stored in data warehouses or smaller data marts. This data can include both historical information and real-time data from various source systems.
b) Data Preparation: Raw data from different sources is integrated, consolidated, and cleansed using data integration and quality management tools. This ensures accurate and consistent information for analysis.
c) Data Analysis: The prepared data is analysed using analytical querying, where BI tools run queries to extract meaningful insights. Using BI tools (like Power BI, Tableau, or Qlik), the stored data is analysed through:
   - Querying: Asking questions from data, such as sales by region or by product.
   - Data mining: Detecting hidden trends and correlations.
   - Predictive analytics: Forecasting future patterns based on historical data.
d) Distribution: Key performance indicators (KPIs) and other analytical findings are distributed to business users through reports, dashboards, and visualizations.
e) Decision-Making: The insights and information gathered from the analysis are used to influence and drive strategic and tactical business decisions.

Initially, BI tools were used mainly by BI and IT professionals. However, with the advent of self-service BI tools, business users, including analysts and executives, can now query data, create visualizations, and design dashboards on their own.

Practical Example

"A coffee shop chain uses BI to boost sales. They collect data from their sales systems and customer feedback. The BI tools show which drinks are most popular and which times of the day are busiest. The shop then adjusts its menu and staffing based on these insights. This leads to higher sales and better customer service."

Concept 15 - Importance of Business Intelligence (BI)

Business Intelligence (BI) is essential for improving business operations by turning data into valuable insights. Organizations using BI tools can make informed, data-driven decisions, leading to increased productivity, revenue, and growth. Without BI, companies rely on intuition and past experiences, which can result in errors and missed opportunities. BI ensures decisions are backed by data, reducing risks and enhancing overall business performance

Concept 16 - Benefits of Business Intelligence (BI)

a) Speed up and improve decision-making
b) Optimize internal business processes
c) Increase operational efficiency and productivity
d) Spot business problems that need to be addressed
e) Identify emerging business and market trends
f) Develop stronger business strategies
g) Drive higher sales and new revenues
h) Gain a competitive edge over rival companies

Concept 17 - Types of Business Intelligence (BI) Tools and Applications

1) Ad Hoc Analysis – the process of writing and running queries to analyze specific business issues on temporary basis.
2) Online Analytical Processing (OLAP) – Analysing data in multiple dimensions to handle complex questions and calculations.
3) Mobile BI - Using BI apps on smartphones and tablets, showing simple charts and key metrics.
4) Real-time BI - data is analyzed as it's created, collected and processed to give users an up-to-date view of business operations, customer behaviour, financial markets and other areas of interest
5) Operational Intelligence (OI) - Also called operational BI, this is a form of real-time analytics that delivers information to managers and frontline workers in business operations.
6) Open Source BI (OSBI) Business intelligence software that is open source typically includes two versions: a community edition that can be used free of charge and a subscription-based commercial release with technical support by the vendor.
7) Embedded BI - These tools put BI and data visualization functionality directly into business applications. That enables business users to analyze data within the applications they use to do their job.

8) Collaborative BI - This is more of a process than a specific technology which involves the combination of BI applications and collaboration tools to enable different users to work together on data analysis and share information with one another.
9) Location Intelligence (LI) - This is a specialized form of BI that enables users to analyze location and Geographic data, with map-based data visualization incorporated.

Concept 18 - Business Intelligence (BI) Platforms

Modern BI platforms typically include:

a) Data Visualization Software - Designs charts and infographics for easy data understanding.
b) BI Dashboards and Reports - Creates dashboards, reports, and scorecards to display key performance indicators (KPIs) and business metrics.
c) Data Storytelling Features - Combines visualizations and text for business presentations.
d) Management Tools - Monitors usage, optimizes performance, and ensures security in BI deployments.

General Use Cases of BI in an enterprise:

a) monitoring business performance
b) supporting decision-making and strategic planning
c) evaluating and improving business processes.
d) giving operational workers useful information about customers, equipment, supply chains etc.
e) detecting trends, patterns and relationships in data.

Concept 1 – Introduction and objective of PMLA

The Prevention of Money Laundering Act (PMLA), 2002 was enacted in January 2003. It contains 10 Chapters, 75 Sections and One Schedule.

The Act along with the Rules framed thereunder have come into force with effect from 1st July 2005.
